Chapter 1 - Silence

1 - Silence

Silence
Dreadful silence
The air reeks of death
The ghosts of those murdered hang tight around our throats and we cannot breathe. They sit quiet and wait for us to join them in their eternal unrest. A gun shot rings. Two down from me in this, the judging line is a pale, quivering man. He holds the lifeless body of a child. A single tear finds his cheek then the last of his life light leaves his eyes. All we can do is lie here. In our shame, our filth. I watch my fellow waste away. And I can do nothing. So we die in the silence. In the pain of the dreadful silence. Another poem by me. Watcha think?
